H.R. No. 1593

RESOLUTION

1 WHEREAS, Recent congressional hearings into the use of 2 anabolic steroids and other performance-enhancing drugs by 3 high-profile professional athletes have highlighted widespread 4 concerns about the prevalence of such substance abuse, including 5 the degree to which the practice has filtered down to high school 6 athletes and even to younger middle school students; and

7 WHEREAS, Developed in the 1930s to treat certain developmental abnormalities, anabolic steroids found their way 8 outside the medical arena, first in the 1950s as bodybuilders and 9 weightlifters discovered the compounds enabled them to gain 10 11 strength and muscle mass more quickly than was possible through 12 training and diet alone and later when athletes in other sports came 13 to believe that using the drugs would boost their performance; and

WHEREAS, Although these steroids are known to have numerous adverse physical and psychological side effects, this knowledge did little to deter use of the drugs by athletes seeking a shortcut to becoming bigger and stronger or to gain a competitive edge on the field, court, track, or in the pool; and

WHEREAS, In the past, steroid use was a phenomenon largely confined to competitors in collegiate, Olympic, and professional sports, where concern about the impact of such drug use led most major professional and amateur athletic organizations, including the National Collegiate Athletic Association, the International Olympic Committee, and the National Football League, to ban steroid use by their athletes; today, however, steroids are being used by athletes and nonathletes alike in high schools and even in middle schools across the country, and evidence suggests that steroid use among teenagers, and especially among aspiring athletes, is a large and growing problem; and

6 WHEREAS, According to the Centers for Disease Control and 7 Prevention, more than 500,000 high school students have tried 8 steroids, nearly three times the number just 10 years ago; the most 9 recent survey by the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) and the University of Michigan, who have studied the extent of drug use 10 among high school students each year since 1975, found that more 11 than 40 percent of high school seniors described steroids as fairly 12 13 easy or very easy to obtain; and

WHEREAS, That same NIDA survey, Monitoring the Future 2004, 14 15 found that the percentage of students who perceived the harm in steroid use fell from 71 percent in 1992 to just 56 percent in 2004; 16 17 this diminished perception of harm is especially worrisome, since steroids are particularly dangerous to adolescents at this stage in 18 their development; even small doses of the drug can stop growth 19 prematurely, and the risk of permanent physical impairment is 20 compounded by the fact that adolescents who use steroids also may be 21 at risk of becoming dependent on the drug and are more likely to use 22 23 other addictive drugs and alcohol; and

24 WHEREAS, There are social consequences as well; in 1991, 25 Congress added anabolic steroids to the Controlled Substances Act 26 as a Schedule III drug, making it illegal to possess or sell them 27 without a valid prescription and allowing for the arrest of persons charged with illegal possession of a classified substance; since 1989, Texas statutes have similarly prohibited any nonmedical use

4 WHEREAS, Section 481.071(c), Health and Safety Code, 5 specifically states that bodybuilding, muscle enhancement, or 6 increasing muscle bulk or strength is not a valid medical purpose 7 for anabolic steroid use by a healthy individual; Section 38.008, 8 Education Code, requires each public middle and high school to post a notice to this effect, including notice that a violation of Texas 9 steroid law is a criminal offense punishable by a jail or prison 10 sentence; and 11

WHEREAS, Given the increased attention to and concern about adolescent use of anabolic steroids, the 79th Texas Legislature currently is considering legislative measures specifically addressing steroid use by students engaged in extracurricular activities, but a law, once passed requires strict and certain enforcement if it is to have any effect; now, therefore, be it 18 RESOLVED, That the House of Representatives of the 79th Texas 19 Legislature hereby direct law enforcement agencies in this state to 20 enforce laws prohibiting the illegal use of anabolic steroids by 21 public school students engaged in extracurricular activities.
