Fiscal Analysis

The bill would result in a loss of revenue (General Revenue-Dedicated) for fees currently charged for birth and death records. The Department of State Health Services anticipates incurring costs for implementation of the provisions of the bill.

Methodology

The Department of State Health Services estimates that implementation of the bill would result in costs to the agency for training of local registration offices, watermark paper for non-certified copies of records and technology costs for software modifications and website updates. One-time implementation costs are $341,500 in 2006. On-going costs are for watermark paper, estimated to be $3,448 in each year (10 cents per page).

DSHS estimates the bill would result in the issuance of 20 percent of certified birth and death certificates (abstracted versions) to the entities that would be exempted from the bill. DSHS also estimates a decrease of 20 percent in revenue generated from local rebates for remote access sales of birth certificates. The total estimated loss in revenue to the Vital Statistics account would be $555,835 in each year.

Technology

Technology costs are included in the estimate for 2006. Technology costs would be for software modifications ($280,000) and contract programming for website updates (40,000).

Local Government Impact

The bill could result in a loss in revenue for the sale of birth and death records in local registration offices.
