Committee Report (Substituted)

AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

The incidence of autism spectrum disorder (ASD) among children has steadily increased in the past decade. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recently completed a comprehensive study on the prevalence of ASDs, which concluded that one in 150 children experience some form of ASD. There is substantial evidence suggesting that when children with ASD receive early intervention treatments, many of the behaviors associated with their condition can be reversed or minimized. The U.S. spends $90 billion on ASD per year, 90 percent of which is spent on adult services. Early intervention for ASD can cut lifetime costs by two-thirds, but the initial costs associated with providing treatment prevent the majority of families from being able to afford early intervention services.

Currently, between 90 and 95 percent of private health plans deny coverage for ASD. Insurers deny treatment coverage for children with ASD by classifying ASD as a mental illness, although autism is recognized as a neurobiological disorder in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders of the American Psychiatric Association.

C.S.S.B. 419 defines "neurobiological disorder" and "autism spectrum disorder" and requires ASD treatment to be covered by insurance for children ages three to five years, since ASD is usually diagnosed between 12 and 36 months.
