IN RE: HB461 by Miller (Relating to participation in an animal identification system.), As Engrossed

No significant fiscal implication to the State is anticipated.

This bill amends section 161.056 of the Texas Agriculture Code to make participation in a state premises registration and animal identification program voluntary. The bill also The US Department of Agriculture currently funds the state's premises registration and animal identification program. The annual cost of the program is an estimated $357,173. Since USDA currently allows for voluntary participation in the premises registration and animal identification program, this analysis assumes that the state would continue to receive federal funds to administer a voluntary state program. Other costs associated with implementation of this legislation, the cost of a mail-out notifying current registrants that they may opt-out of the program, are not significant ($15,000 per year). Finally, although this bill authorizes the Commission to collect an annual fee from registrants, since the premises registration and animal identification program would be voluntary; this fee is not expected to generate significant revenue.

Local Government Impact

No significant fiscal implication to units of local government is anticipated.
