AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Child obesity rates and related health problems continue to increase in Texas. Although a number of school-based programs and interventions have been implemented to curb the problem, few efforts have been made to address the early childhood population. New evidence suggests that more children are entering kindergarten overweight. This trend is especially problematic because the earlier weight problems develop, the more difficult they are to overcome. Unfortunately, tackling the issues of early childhood health in Texas is difficult, because there are six state agencies that provide some level of oversight on programs that serve children under the age of six. For these reasons, it is important for the state to develop a strategic coordinated plan to improve early childhood nutrition and activity.

S.B. 395 creates a six-person Early Childhood Health and Nutrition Interagency Council (council) to develop an early childhood nutrition and physical activity plan. The council is required to study existing nutrition and physical activity programs and requirements in early childhood settings and consult with key stakeholders to identify barriers to improving related standards. The council is also required to develop an early childhood nutrition and physical activity plan with a recommended timeline for implementation over a six-year period.
