AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Captive insurance companies (captives) are typically formed by large corporations for the purpose of providing insurance exclusively for the corporation. There are a number of types of captives that enable corporations, other entities, and individuals to self-insure, the most traditional type being a pure captive insurance company (pure captive). A pure captive offers a means to self-insure risk originating from a parent company and any affiliates. Under this model, the parent company provides capital in order to adequately fund the captive and, like an admitted carrier, determines what risks it will insure and the premium charged for that risk. Segregated account captive insurance companies are formed by a managing captive insurance company which oversees the individual segregated accounts. Like a pure captive, a segregated account captive insurance company exclusively insures the risk of its' owner; however, the assets and liabilities of each segregated account and the managing captive company are separate from one another.

Currently, over thirty states allow captives. A captive is generally subject to different regulations than a traditional insurance carrier, and insurance commissioners typically have significant discretion to regulate and set the captive's minimum financial requirements based on the financial strength of the captive's owner, the parent company.

The Texas Insurance Code does not currently allow for the formation of captives within the state; however, a number of large companies domiciled in Texas currently have a captive that has been formed in another state with captive enabling legislation. This creates additional expenses and administrative burdens for Texas companies because other states typically impose a number of obligations on an out-of-state company.

S.B. 734 amends the Texas Insurance Code to authorize the formation of pure captive insurance companies and segregated account captive insurance companies in Texas. The captive must be licensed with the Texas Department of Insurance. S.B. 734 also explicitly states the types of insurance and reinsurance the captive may issue and requires that the captive company obtain approval from the commissioner of insurance (commissioner) before providing reinsurance. Additionally, S.B. 734 requires an appropriate amount of initial capital, provides the commissioner the authority to conduct a detailed examination of the applicant to ensure that all statutory requirements have been met and that the applicant's business model is sufficient; requires a captive to file an annual report with the commissioner containing a statement of the company's financial condition; prohibits a captive from participating in the state guaranty fund; states the process for license suspension or revocation; and notes the captive's obligations for premium and maintenance taxes.

S.B. 734 amends current law relating to the licensing of captive insurance companies; authorizing fees and authorizing and imposing taxes.
