Fiscal Analysis

The bill would amend the Government Code to expand the powers and duties of the Office of Capital Writs (OCW) and to rename that office the Office of Capital and Forensic Writs (OCFW). The duties of the OCW would be expanded beyond post-conviction matters in death penalty cases to include habeas corpus and other post-conviction matters in cases involving certain scientific evidence that becomes available after a conviction (within the meaning of Code of Criminal Procedure, Sec. 11.073 provisions relating to certain scientific evidence). The new OCFW would be authorized to consult with law school clinics and other experts to investigate the facts of a particular 11.073 case.

The bill would take effect September 1, 2015.

Methodology

For the purposes of this analysis, all costs in the table above from the General Revenue-Dedicated - Fair Defense Account No. 5073 would be associated with the OCW fulfilling the expanded duties as the OCFW.

This analysis assumes the agency would establish procedures and a methodology for handling the scientific evidence cases during the 2016-17 biennium in addition to processing a small number of cases within the agency's existing resources. This analysis also assumes the agency would need full-time staff to manage additional cases that would be referred to the agency during the 2018-19 biennium. The agency would need to hire two attorneys in 2018 and an additional attorney in 2019. Salaries and benefits for the new staff would total $168,662 in fiscal year 2018 and $246,506 in fiscal year 2019 and each year thereafter. There would be additional expenses for professional services, travel, equipment and payroll contributions. There would be one-time equipment and furnishing costs of $7,255 in fiscal year 2018 and $2,500 in fiscal year 2019.

Local Government Impact

No significant fiscal implication to units of local government is anticipated.
