

Joel Alex Hill

While law enforcement can always benefit from increased training, it is impossible for few to protect all. It is the responsibility of all persons to keep themselves safe, and it is a human right to protect oneself. It is biased against all manners of people to restrict the ways in which a human may protect themselves from threats.

Red flag laws have already led to the deaths of several innocent citizens, and will certainly lead to more. Furthermore they are an obvious destruction of the right of due process.

Gun free zones do nothing to curb violence. Laws restricting ownership and use of firearms do not reduce crime, and very likely increase it.

Reductions of rights do not benefit the People, only those in power.

I have a degree in Criminology and have studied these topics to a reasonable degree.

Everyone desires safety, but security theater isn't that, and depending on a higher human power doesn't actually benefit those who the powers seek to.
