AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

A municipal court of record is required to provide a court reporter to create and preserve a record in cases tried before the court, while an ordinary municipal court typically does not create or preserve a record. The practical effect of this difference surfaces on appeal. Appeals from either type of municipal court are generally to the county court. Appeals from a municipal court are tried de novo, meaning that the case is tried again from the beginning, and all the evidence and witnesses must be presented again. On the other hand, an appeal from a municipal court of record is based on specific points of error as contained in the "record" of the court.

Texas law allows municipal courts of record to enforce health and safety and nuisance abatement ordinances within the city limits. However, municipal courts are not currently allowed to enforce these types of ordinances.

This legislation would allow a city to pass an ordinance permitting a municipal court to enforce health and safety and nuisance abatement ordinances. Individual city councils would be permitted to grant their municipal court the same jurisdiction as a municipal court of record.

As proposed, S.B. 304 amends current law relating to the jurisdiction of municipal courts over health and safety and nuisance abatement ordinances.

This bill does not expressly grant any additional rulemaking authority to a state officer, institution, or agency.
