AUTHOR'S / SPONSOR'S STATEMENT OF INTENT

Many public-school districts in Texas are designated as districts of innovation, but state law does not provide specific guidelines for their school start dates. This lack of guidance makes it challenging for families to plan summer vacations and summer camps, and for recreation, tourism, and other small businesses to allocate staff and resources effectively. S.B. 2829 aims to address this issue by revising the scheduling of the first day of school for students in districts of innovation.

Many small businesses, tourism-related enterprises, and summer camps rely heavily on summer travel profits for year-round sustainability. These businesses would benefit from a school schedule that consistently begins in late August, and the tax revenue they generate would benefit the state. Additionally, these businesses often employ high school-aged students, providing them with valuable educational experiences by allowing them to gain and apply workforce skills that can translate into their academic learning. However, the unpredictability of annual school calendars can make employment decisions difficult for these businesses.

The bill would not affect the quality of instruction, as Texas allows for flexibility in either minutes of instruction or days of instruction, not just days. Districts of innovation would still have some flexibility in starting the school year to support student success. The bill would be especially crucial for military families and military-connected students, who often experience frequent moves and transitions that can be exacerbated by inconsistent school start dates.

RULEMAKING AUTHORITY
