Fiscal Analysis

The bill would exclude certain securities transaction payments from the total revenue of a taxable entity that is an exchange or a member of an exchange for the purposes of the franchise tax.

A taxable entity would be able to exclude from its total revenue, if the entity was an exchange, transaction rebate payments made by the exchange to a member of the exchange as part of a securities transaction; and if the entity is a member of an exchange, transaction rebate payments made to the member by the exchange as part of a securities transaction. The bill would add definitions for terms related to such transactions.

The bill would be effective January 1, 2026.

Methodology

Currently there are plans for two stock exchanges to begin operations in Texas. A new Texas Stock Exchange reportedly plans to begin trading in early 2026. And the Chicago NYSE reportedly will reincorporate as Texas NYSE.

Transaction rebate payments made by exchanges domiciled in the state to member companies would be revenue apportionable to the state for franchise tax. This estimate assumes transaction rebate payment volume for these regional exchanges would initially equal 5 percent of that of the NASDAQ exchange, with first revenue implications occurring for franchise tax report due in 2027.

Local Government Impact

No fiscal implication to units of local government is anticipated.
